What we're checking out this week

TRY

It's a cruel, cruel summer but Origins has our ticket. The natural skin-care company's latest rollout is tailor made for sweaty Miamians. The Zero Oil Collection sucks out the extra dew with mint and saw palmetto (extracted from the fruit of Serenoa repens, a small palm). Then there's the wrinkle preventer, Dr. Andrew Weil's Mega Mushroom Skin Relief Advanced Face Serum, which is as key as SPF before you walk out the door. We're also fully enjoying the GinZing Refreshing Eye Cream, when we didn't get our full eight hours. Does any-one? At Origins stores and origins.com.

SEE

Whether you hate it or love it, Facebook has become a part of our everyday lives. Ever wonder about the story behind the social-media empire? You can't see the film until October, but you can go to 500million-friends.com and watch the mesmerizing trailer for The Social Network, about Facebook's beginnings.

The movie centers on Mark Zuckerberg (played by Jesse Eisenberg), a Harvard undergrad who started Facebook from his dorm room in 2003. Watch Zuckerberg's tumultuous rise from college kid to the youngest billionaire in history.

Also on the lookout for Justin Timberlake (so that's where he's been hiding). The trailer also features a great choir rendition of Radiohead's Creep.

BUY

The jury isn't totally out on the benefits of fluoride (it's been linked to some health problems such as osteoporosis), but Cocunut Grove aesthetic dentist Dr. Bruno Sharp likes to be on the safe side. His line of natural toothpastes and washes are made with certified organic botanicals. He also uses ingredients free of parabens, sodium lauryl sulfate and alcohol. The packaging is sleek and clean, except for the kids' line, which features a little monkey. Your little ones will love the strawberry cream flavor. What a way to motivate them to brush. LISTEN

One of M.I.A.'s most powerful tools is a voice that never sounds processed, even when it's manipulated, chopped and distorted. Even when her songs are about oppressed people she doesn't know, she always remains in the thick of the story. On the Sri Lankan rebel's new album, MA YA, she is trying to stay in the thick of her own life. It turns out to be a struggle worthy of a revolutionary. In its 12 tracks, the Paper Planes singer explores what it means to serve as a sexual/romantic ideal in the Beyoncé way and what happens when a self-consciously political artist — like M.I.A. herself — confronts the sentimental streak within.

Creed frontman now a family man

Independence Day 2010 will always have special meaning for Scott Stapp. It's the date the 36-year-old Creed frontman and his wife Jaclyn Nesheiwat welcomed a boy into the world.

Daniel Issam Stapp joins big sister Milan, 3, and 12-year-old half-brother Jagger, about whom Stapp penned the band's No. 1 single With Arms Wide Open. With such honest lyrics as "I don't know if I'm ready to be the man I have to be/I'll take a breath, I'll take her by my side/We stand in awe, we've created life," the 2000 hit struck a chord with many new parents.

Though Stapp penned the song as a nervous dad-to-be, he's now an old pro. "It's been an exciting time for us," he says from his Miami home. "We're nesting at home enjoying the baby. Everything's quiet."

That sounds hard to believe with a newborn, but it's true, he says. "We're broken-in parents; we know how to do it now," he says. "But we're lucky, D.I. only cries when he has a wet diaper or he's hungry."

Sounds like the Stapps may have a budding musician on their hands. "The baby is getting really alert. I think he even may be communicating a little. He stared right at me this morning when I whistled scales at him."

Stapp, who will play with Creed July 31 at Cruzan Amphitheatre as part of the "20-10 Tour," can always use an audience when he's rehearsing for his next solo album, due out early next year.

The stuff he's writing reflects his current personal situation. "I spend a lot of time sitting around watching my family, and I love my wife dearly so I wrote Crazy in Love for her," he says. "I'm never done learning how to articulate about that, and I want to get it right. She and my daughter have changed my understanding of women."

Miami is another inspiration.

"I love the water; I love the ocean. It keeps it from being Groundhog Day for me every day," says Stapp, who has a home on Biscayne Bay. "I just feel connected to the water."

Life down here is pretty normal. "I can stroll down Lincoln Road with my kids and do my thing," says the North Carolina native. "It's a city that's alive — it's breathing, moving."

Stapp can usually walk around without getting stopped, though there are a few who mistake the rocker for his celebrity doppelganger, Colin Farrell.

"People come up to me and ask me, 'Colin! Can I have your autograph?'" The two met a few years ago.

"We were joking around because he always gets mistaken for me. We're the same height and build," he says, adding, "He's much better looking."

Stapp likes to keep in touch with his fans and isn't averse to Tweeting, Facebook and such. But his kids won't see much of that action.

"[The Internet] is a double-edged sword," he says, "though it's a great way for an artist to stay connected to their fans or their family or friends, it really exposes the underbelly of our society and it's really in my opinion keeping a lot of kids inside."

The Stapp household is strict about computer time.

"We have cutoff times, even for Dad," he says. "The Internet is strictly for school projects. No video games unless it's earned."

He'd rather see kids get some fresh air.

"I tell my son, 'There are bikes out there. Go! When I was his age I was begging to go outside!'"

Hip surgery coming for Zsa Zsa

Zsa Zsa Gabor will have surgery to replace the hip she broke when she fell out of bed in her Bel Air home, the Associated Press quoted her publicist as saying Sunday.

John Blanchette said the 93-year-old actress will undergo the procedure on Monday.

Gabor remained in a Los Angeles hospital Sunday with her husband, Prince Frederic von Anhalt, and other family members by her side.

She was watching television in her Bel Air home when she reached to answer the phone and tumbled to the floor, according to Blanchette.

"She was watching her favorite show, Jeopardy, when the phone rang," he said. "She reached over to pick it up and fell."

He said several bones were broken, but said he didn't know any other details of her injuries.

Von Anhalt called an ambulance, and Gabor was taken to Ronald Reagan UCLA Medical Center.

The hospital said early Sunday that family members were with her but did not disclose any other details.

The actress is partially paralyzed from a 2002 car accident, which required her to use a wheelchair. She also reportedly had a stroke in 2005.

Gabor, a native of Hungary, appeared in films ranging from Moulin Rouge in 1952 to Queen of Outer Space in 1958. She also has appeared on TV specials and game shows, and as a guest on several television series, often playing herself.
